Dear Sir:

Attention: Mr. Wood:

We were referred to you as to be the most likely man to tell us something about a Coin we are most desirous to know, if any premium is on same.

The coin we have reference to is a Quarter Eagle from the year 1807, without stating on coin any denomination. Enclosed please find a drawing of same, of both sides.

Thanking in advance for your kind reply, we are

Yours Very Truly

Dear Sirs:

We have your letter of September 9th in regard to a gold Quarter Eagle of 1807. This piece is one of the regular issues of the United States Mint; and pieces of the same design without denomination were issued from 1796 to 1807, inclusive. From the latter date on, the denomination was placed upon the coin.

In regard to the value of the coin today, it is impossible to give you an accurate answer because the price of these pieces in the coin market is governed very largely by the condition in which they are. Even the slightest marks of wear very materially affect the price. It is, however, true that all American gold coins are today worth something more than their face value; but unless your piece is in absolutely uncirculated condition, it would not be worth probably more than two or three times its face value.

Very truly yours,
